

U.S Supreme Court Commission

Greetings from Nantucket!

To all my friends and collectors, who helped me get my two sons through college...

As some of you may already have heard, I have been commissioned to paint the portrait of the U.S. Supreme Court building.

I was commissioned in December by Rick Mofsen, CEO of Clinical Research Inc.

In early February, I went down to Washington to photograph the artistic options, and to say, that it is an AWE INSPIRING building is an understatement! The details on the building are unbelievable, I LOVE IT! I have now been painting on it for a month and a half and if I may say so myself “ It’s already looking pretty damn good.”

Eventually all three of my paintings, The White House, The Capital and The U.S. Supreme Court, will go to the National Gallery of Art, which will give my grandkids and yours, something to REALLY talk about.

To make sure of this, I have hired Delia Skye, president of “ Skye Enterprises” and Ryan Webb of “ Seven By Design” to handle PR and marketing of the prints. I have known Dee since college. She was my cheerleading partner at East Carolina University, the first year they had male cheerleaders...who knew, not only was she pretty, she was smart too.(and still is!)

I soon realized, after starting the US Supreme Court painting, it was going to take me 4 to 6 months to complete and I was not going to have enough time to do enough originals to justify keeping the Gallery on Easy Street. At the end of January, with a heavy heart, I informed my landlord that I would not be taking the Gallery space.

So this summer I will be showing my originals and prints from my home on Dukes Road. Dee will be on Nantucket this summer, to help put the final touches on the U.S. Supreme Court project. Now you will finally get to see where I actually paint and where my dog Cisco retired to...Look forward, seeing you there.

Sincerely, Jim Cromartie
